I'm no longer sure the place you are getting your information, but good topic. I must spend a while studying more or working out more. Thank you for excellent info I was looking for this info for my mission.The present invention relates to a refrigerant injection control system for a refrigerating cycle. In general, a refrigerating cycle comprises a compressor, a condenser, an expansion valve, and an evaporator. In addition, the refrigerating cycle is provided with an external heat source so that heat energy from the external heat source is transmitted to the internal heat exchanger by the refrigerant. The liquid refrigerant is boiled while it is compressed by the compressor. This compressed refrigerant is sent to the external heat source and is again boiled while it is circulated around the external heat source. The vapor refrigerant then flows into the condenser and is condensed. The liquid refrigerant that has passed through the condenser flows into the expansion valve, where it is expanded and liquefied. The thus obtained low-temperature and low-pressure liquid refrigerant then flows into the evaporator. The low-pressure liquid refrigerant then evaporates.
