Like the rest of CS6, it's not a big update, but it enables you to correct minor details and crop out unwanted stuff. The last of the major improvements is to the "Split Toning" tool. This panel lets you apply a set of preexisting toning adjustments in addition to the image and text you've chosen to work on. Along the way, it displays the five toning presets that are available for any light zone (see the various zone masks in the upper-right window of this photo). You can deftly use the panel buttons to easily access the corrections that you may have created for a previous image in a different Lightroom catalog.
